Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Friday 03 Dec 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Generally unsettled and often on the cold side.

Today:
Rain and drizzle clearing slowly southeastwards across England and Wales before further rain returns to the southwest later. Northern parts mostly dry and bright but showers affecting northern and western Scotland, becoming persistent and heavier later. Milder in the south.

Tonight:
Evening rain clearing from southern England, then a drier spell before further rain and showers move southeastwards across most parts. Turning windy in the west.

Saturday:
A mixture of sunny spells and showers, the showers heaviest and most frequent in the north and west with some hail and thunder. Feeling cold in strong and gusty winds.

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Cold and frosty for western areas early Sunday. Showers elsewhere, with snow over high ground. Organised band of rain clears east Monday, preceded by snow. Wet and increasingly windy Tuesday.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.